

Asia Morning Bites

Australian private capex will give a first glimpse of next week's 2Q24 GDP prospects on an otherwise quiet day

Asia Morning Bites

Global Macro and Markets

- Global Markets: It was another very quiet day for US Treasury markets. Neither the 2Y or 10Y did much, and that was despite some very dovish comments from the Fed's Bostic, who seemed unconvinced that a September cut was a foregone conclusion. The 10Y yield is currently 3.835%. Here is a piece by Padhraic Garvey on where we see the 10Y UST heading over the short and medium run.

EURUSD retreated after the late gains of Tuesday and has dropped back to just 1.1125. Most of the rest of the G-10 pack has followed the EUR weaker, though the AUD has held up a bit better, perhaps on the misplaced view that yesterday's upside CPI miss would keep the RBA on hold for longer. See our note from yesterday for more on this. We don't see the RBA moving before 1Q25, but yesterday's inflation figures weren't as bad as the market reaction seems to imply, Please see the details here.

Asian FX had a mixed day again, though the outperformers are simply lagging the rest of the pack. The KRW propped up the bottom of the daily performance table and USDKRW has risen to 1336.35. USDCNY was little changed at 7.1279. The IDR, THB and MYR will likely reverse yesterday's gains this morning.

US stocks experienced another day of losses. The S&P 500 fell 0.6% and the NASDAQ dropped 1.12%. Chinese stocks were also down. The Hang Seng fell 1.02% and the CSI 300 fell 0.57%.

- G-7 Macro: Yesterday was extremely quiet for macro releases. It is a bit busier today, though the second release of the US GDP figures for 2Q24 is now of mainly historical interest, apart from the profits update which comes with that second release. Advance US goods trade data for July is also published. But trade data is not a big market mover. Initial jobless claims may also get more than the usual glance as the US labour market seems to have become the new benchmark by which the market will estimate the Fed's easing scope and pace. We will also get a lot of German inflation releases, including the national harmonized index. The Eurozone publishes some August business and consumer confidence numbers.
- Australia: Private capital expenditure data which feeds into next week's 2Q24 GDP figure is published at 0930 SGT/HKT today. The net export figures which are released on 3 September are more likely to drive the overall GDP number.

What to look out for: US GDP second release, Australia private capital expenditure

August 29th

Australia: 2Q private capital expenditure
