

Bank of Canada's dovish shift

The Bank of Canada has left interest rates unchanged as widely expected, but the accompanying statement includes a dovish shift that reinforces our view that they are gearing up for a rate cut

Bank of Canada
Governor, Stephen
Poloz

No policy change, but external risks are rising

At the July monetary policy meeting, the Bank of Canada suggested there was little prospect of any near-term policy change. However, today's statement warned that "the US-China trade conflict has escalated, world trade has contracted and business investment has weakened. This is weighing more heavily on global economic momentum than the Bank had projected in its July Monetary Policy Report".

While domestic activity had been stronger than expected, some of this was going to be "temporary" – such as the restarting of production at various oil fields. Moreover, the weakness in consumer spending caught them by surprise with the BoC expecting "economic activity to slow in the second half of the year". The recent pick-up in inflation is also "largely because of temporary factors".

They conclude that "the current degree of monetary policy stimulus remains appropriate", but warn that “escalating trade conflicts and related uncertainty are taking a toll on the global and Canadian economies”.

While we think the statement suggests growing caution at the BoC regarding the economic outlook and hints at a dovish shift, the market has taken it in stride with bond yields barely changed and the Canadian dollar a touch firmer.

Where the US goes, Canada typically follows

Amid the global clamor for looser monetary policy we suspect that the Bank of Canada will cut interest rates this year with a move certainly possible in October. Yesterday’s ISM index from the US was particularly worrying as where this index goes the Canadian economy usually quickly follows. After all, the Canadian economy is relatively open with trade accounting for more than 30% of economic activity versus little more than 10% for the US. Canada is also more dependent on commodities for a significant proportion of its output with mineral extraction and agriculture representing more than 10% of the economy.

ISM fall points to Canadian slowdown

Source: Macrobond, ING

BoC set to act swiftly, but modestly

At the moment the market is pricing in around a 55% probability of a 25bp rate cut in October, whereas the latest survey of analysts by Bloomberg continues to peg stable rates through this year and next. Given Canada’s trade and commodity exposure and with little prospect of an imminent easing in trade and global growth concerns, we recently changed our view to a 30 October cut and that call remains valid.

After all, the BoC’s has a tendency to move swiftly after signaling a shift in thinking. In this regard think back to 2015 when the BoC rapidly changed its tune and cut rates in response to plunging oil prices and the fears for what it might mean for the broader economy. We also remember 2017, when it surprised with a September hike after already hiking rates in July. Swift, but modest action seems to be the BoC’s mantra.

How the US-China dialogue plays out will be critical. For now though we would point out that the BoC was far less aggressive in hiking rates than the Federal Reserve over the past couple of years. As such, there is arguably less need for a significant corrective move lower in rates. Hence our view that this would be a one-off rate cut.

Author

James Knightley

Chief International Economist, US

james.knightley@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit www.ing.com.