

Belgium: Political crisis results in minority government

The Belgian government lost its majority on Saturday as ministers from the NV-A, the biggest Flemish party, decided to resign in protest over the UN migration pact. A minority government is likely to remain in place until Federal elections in May 2019. But there's a risk that Michel II ends up being a lame duck government

Belgian Prime Minister Charles Michel speaks at the federal parliament

Source: Shutterstock

The facts

We highlighted in our previous note that ministers from the NV-A, the Flemish nationalist party, could possibly resign if Prime Minister Charles Michel were to endorse the UN migration pact at a conference in Marrakesh. Given the decision of the other coalition partners, supported by a majority in parliament, to go ahead with the Migration Compact and to sign the deal in New York on 19 December, the NVA decided to pull out of the government on Saturday.

With an election already planned for May, PM Michel has decided to continue with a minority government. As a consequence, the "new" government is composed of the CD&V (Flemish Christian Democrats), the Open-VLD (Flemish Liberals) and the MR (French-speaking Liberals).

These three parties have almost 1/3 of the seats in parliament. Ministers from the NV-A have already been replaced and approved by King Philippe. A minority cabinet is new in Belgium but it appears there is at least some room to test the arrangement; up to now, no political party has called for an early election.

What's next?

When Michel returns from Morocco, he will have to negotiate with parliament to find a new way of working. The "new" government has already agreed on three main guidelines for future action:

1. Purchasing power and a strong social and economic policy
2. Security and justice
3. Ecological transition

Of course, nothing can be approved without other political parties. So the idea is to find alternative majorities for each future proposition. For the time being, opposition parties are taking a wait-and-see attitude, but they are unlikely to support the government unless they have an important say in any new initiative. At the same time, the NVA has said it will support laws already agreed upon by the previous government. As such, the approval of the budget 2019 is still feasible. Also, the gradual reduction of unemployment benefits and a number of measures regarding mobility should be able to garner a majority.

The risks

Our base case is for a minority government to work with alternative majorities until the elections in May. But there are still many risks.

- The first point of concern is the 2019 budget that was agreed at the government level but still not approved by parliament. As the budget is part of a bigger deal, the NVA may well demand that the compromises agreed to last summer are passed in their entirety. If the current government starts to tweak certain details, the NVA might retract its support in parliament for the approval of the budget.
- Second, at any time, political parties could consider that it is in their interest to trigger new elections, in order to benefit from the current disorder. Local elections in October have shown some shifts in the electorate, and parties that are seeing positive momentum could be tempted to capitalise on that. That said, most political parties don't think it is optimal to ask the population to vote twice in five months, so this risk remains small.
- Third, testing a new way of working will not be easy, as the election campaign has de facto started. We already know that the next election will be crucial for the future of the country. Finding the next majority will be very difficult, given the divergence of political preferences in the North and South of the country. So all political parties will, in the coming months, be strongly inclined to demonstrate they can push through their policies, which is inconsistent with the necessity to find compromises. Paralysis is likely to be the main result.

There is indeed a political crisis in Belgium, but we don't think we'll see elections before May 2019. The next two weeks will be crucial in order to see if the Belgian political institutions are able to function with a minority government, with the main risk being that "Michel II" ends up being a lame duck.

Author

Philippe Ledent

Senior Economist, Belgium, Luxembourg

philippe.ledent@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit <http://www.ing.com>.