

Brexit latest: Ding ding, round three

The UK government seeks to ramp up the pace as Brexit talks enter round three and a crucial October EU vote on the negotiation progress fast approaches

UK position papers attempt to inject pace into Brexit talks

Brexit is well and truly back, with the UK releasing a raft of position papers ahead of the third round of EU talks next week. We looked at some of these last week, but all the latest headlines focus on the role of the European Courts of Justice (ECJ) after Brexit. The issue of sovereignty was a big talking point in last year's referendum campaign and a key feature of the UK's twelve negotiating goals released in January was that "we will take back control of our laws and bring an end to the jurisdiction of the ECJ".

Seven months on, the UK is now opting for a slightly different approach. One model being looked at is the European Free Trade Association, or EFTA court, which is currently used by the three members of the European Economic Area (EEA) to resolve trade disputes. The EFTA court is independent of the ECJ and its rulings are non-binding - although the court does interpret ECJ decisions and EU law in its judgements. This latter point has prompted some debate among supporters of a harder Brexit on whether this constitutes an end to ECJ jurisdiction in the UK.

So why the change in approach? Well, the UK appears keen to inject some pace into the negotiations ahead of an important European Council vote in October, where member states will decide whether sufficient progress has been made on key exit issues. Many political commentators have suggested that the UK's subtle change of heart on the ECJ is a sign of compromise on the UK's part to try to kick-start talks on a future trade deal/transitional arrangement.

Five Number of position papers due/released by the UK this week

What to expect from round three of Brexit talks

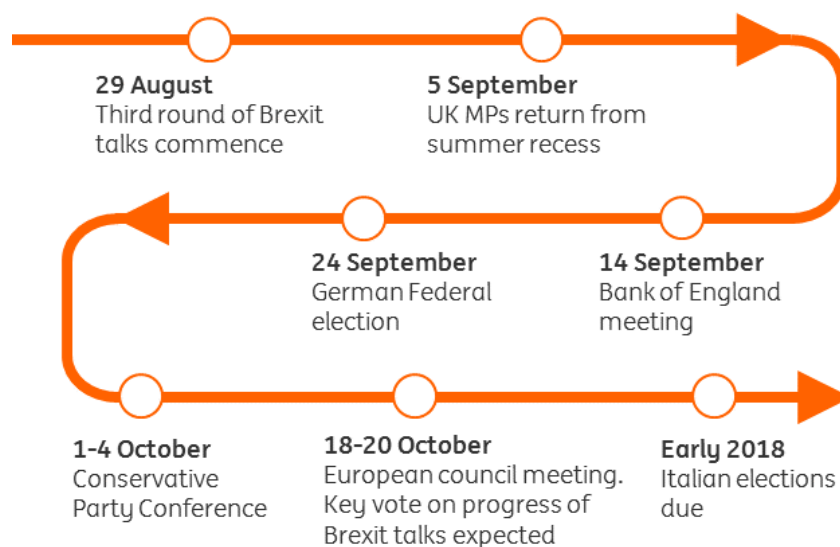

Despite Brexit Secretary David Davis' attempts last week to rekindle the idea of discussing exit issues in tandem with future trade discussions, the EU has been resolute that the former must be agreed before the latter. In particular, the EU wants to reach an agreement on the so-called "divorce bill" and citizens' rights.

These will be the two main issues up for debate next week and whether intentional or not, the EU's October vote effectively puts the UK on the spot. On the one hand, the UK is aware that the possibility of future contributions to the EU budget could be a key bargaining chip in the negotiations on trade. David Davis alluded to this in The Sunday Times this week, saying that the possibility of budget payments after Brexit should be discussed "as part of talks both on our withdrawal from the EU — and our future".

On the flip side, the UK is keen to move onto discussions about the future post-Brexit, and may prefer to reach a quick agreement on the budget/divorce payment in order to avoid a stalemate when it comes to the European Council vote in October. David Davis said in his Times' comments that the government is "interrogating the basis for the EU's position [on the exit bill], line by line, as taxpayers would expect".

Whatever happens, the medium-term economic outlook hinges in no small part on when and what is agreed on the possible transitional period. Once the details are more concrete, we may see some investment return and possibly a modest acceleration in wage growth. That will ultimately have a bearing on whether the Bank of England opts to hike rates in mid-late 2018, or wait until 2019.

Key Brexit events over the next few months

Source: ING

Author

James Smith

Developed Markets Economist

james.smith@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit <http://www.ing.com>.