

ECB stays on hold and makes first tentative dovish shift

The European Central Bank keeps interest rates on hold and, at least in its official statement, has made a very small shift towards dovishness

With the drop in inflation, a further weakening of the economy and the latest comments by senior ECB officials, no one had seriously considered a rate hike at today's meeting. Instead, the only question had been how dovish the ECB's communication shift will be. Before today's meeting, financial markets had already priced in ECB rate cuts by a total of 150bp for next year.

The just-released policy statement signals that at least the end of rate hikes is here. The fact that the phrase "inflation is expected to remain too high for too long" is gone. At the same time, however, the phrase that "rates will be set at sufficiently restrictive levels for as long as necessary" is still in the official communication. The ECB also announced a very gradual phasing out of the reinvestments under the Pandemic Emergency Purchase Programme (PEPP) in the second half of 2024.

Despite their dismal track record, the ECB's staff projections will play an increasingly important role again over the coming months. Today's forecasts show headline inflation at 5.4% in 2023, 2.7% in 2024, 2.1% in 2025 and 1.9% in 2026. GDP growth is expected to come in at 0.6% in 2023, 0.8% for 2024, and 1.5% in both 2025 and 2026. These forecasts would not justify aggressive rate cuts next year.

For now, we still think that the ECB's shift to full dovishness will be more gradual than markets are pricing in. Today's policy announcements and the staff projections nicely confirm this. And, in fact, it is hard to see how the ECB could decide on a full U-turn on policy rates only on the back of a few weaker-than-expected inflation prints without headline inflation falling below 2% and the longer-term inflation forecasts still being at around 2%.

Also, the ECB's forecasting mistakes of the past are probably an almost automatically built-in brake on premature and large-sized rate cuts. In fact, we think that it would require a sharper economic downturn and/or inflation sustainably falling below 2% to see the ECB cutting rates by as much as the currently priced in 150bp. Our base case scenario remains a more gradual shift towards full dovishness and more gradual rate cuts in 2024. Let's see whether ECB Christine Lagarde will say anything to confirm or change this view at the press conference starting at 2.45pm CET.

Author

Carsten Brzeski

Global Head of Macro

carsten.brzeski@ing.de

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit <http://www.ing.com>.