

Europeans willing to pay over €200 on average to secure the European Championship title

Residents of European Union countries would be willing to pay over €200 each on average to bring home the European Championship title for their country, with Italians willing to make the biggest payments - and sacrifices - followed by Austria, England and Spain

Italy fans celebrate at the end of the Italy v Albania match

Every four years, top national teams vie for the coveted European title. This prestigious championship holds significant value, but how much exactly? While the title itself isn't up for sale, gauging how much fans would be willing to pay for victory provides insight into its worth.

Italians value the title at approximately €420 per person. This could be partly explained by their passion for football. Italy, like Spain, has a high proportion of football fans (both at 37%). Austrians are willing to pay €324 each while the English think the title is worth €319 per person - numbers, which may be partly explained by their relatively robust purchasing power compared to many other participants.

What would you pay for your football team to become European champions?

Average amount

Source: Kantar, ING

After all, money is not worth the same everywhere. For example, you can buy 33% more in Portugal than in the Netherlands for 'the same money'. In Italy and Spain too, the purchasing power of one euro is higher. Consumers get about a fifth more value for money there than in the Netherlands. On the other hand, something that costs €100 in the Netherlands will cost €113 in England. An amount in euros does not represent the same sacrifice everywhere.

That is why we also asked about the willingness to surrender 1% of annual income in return for the title. The relative sacrifice is then comparable, regardless of the wage and price level. This results in a few clear shifts in the rankings.

A country with relatively low purchasing power, such as Portugal, then rises a few places in the ranking, (from 9 to 6). A relatively wealthy country such as Austria drops a number of places, falling from second to eighth place.

Handing in the smartphone is often too much to ask

We can also make international comparisons by measuring the potential sacrifice of a particular service, such as a smartphone. Internationally, on average, a quarter (24%) are prepared to hand in their smartphone for one month. The Portuguese and English lead the way here while the Netherlands is near the bottom, at 7%.

Most people do not want to temporarily lose their smartphones

Percentage of respondents with smartphones who can do without it for one month in exchange for the EC title

Source: Kantar, ING

In the Netherlands, only the most devoted football fans seem prepared to make this sacrifice. A fifth (20%) of them are willing to waive their device for a month, among non-fans this willingness is hardly there at all (1%).

This result tallies with the relatively modest value that The Netherlands places on the title itself. The Dutch are willing to pay an average of €46 per person for the title. More than three-quarters of the population aged 18 and above (76%) do not assign any financial value to it. A quarter (24%) do and they would pay an average of over €190 per person to ensure victory. In total, the title is worth €650 million to the Dutch.

This European Championship title worth less than last time

At €46 each, this European Championship title is also worth a little less than the last time the Dutch entered the European Championships. At the EC 2021, the final victory was worth €51. Economically speaking, consumers are now less confident and have not, on average, improved in purchasing power. Another important difference is that in the previous two European Championships, the Dutch failed to get beyond the group stages.

It is now 36 years since the Dutch team held the UEFA European Championship cup. From this historical perspective, it is not surprising that the current €46 per person is significantly higher than the average value that the Dutch placed on the European Championship title earlier in 2008 or 2022.

EC title is worth less to the Dutch than last time

The average amount the Dutch are willing to pay for the EC title

Source: Kantar, ING

Although the value of the European Championship varies by country, the research shows that, among football fans at least, the shared pride and passion associated with the championship transcends national borders.

This research into consumer attitudes and behaviour towards football in participating countries in the European Championship was carried out by Kantar on behalf of ING in April 2024. In the Netherlands, an online survey was conducted among 1070 respondents who are representative of the population on the basis of age, gender and income. In all other countries, at least 500 respondents were interviewed online, representing a representative reflection of the internet population by age and gender.

Author

Marten van Garderen

Consumer Economist, Netherlands

marten.van.garderen@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit www.ing.com.