

GDP Preview: Canada isn't cracking yet

We don't expect tomorrow's release to turn any heads. But economic data tells the story of how Canada is reaping the rewards of an exceptionally strong US economy - despite the ongoing trade tensions - and we don't expect that to change anytime soon

Source: pexels

0.4%

ING's forecast

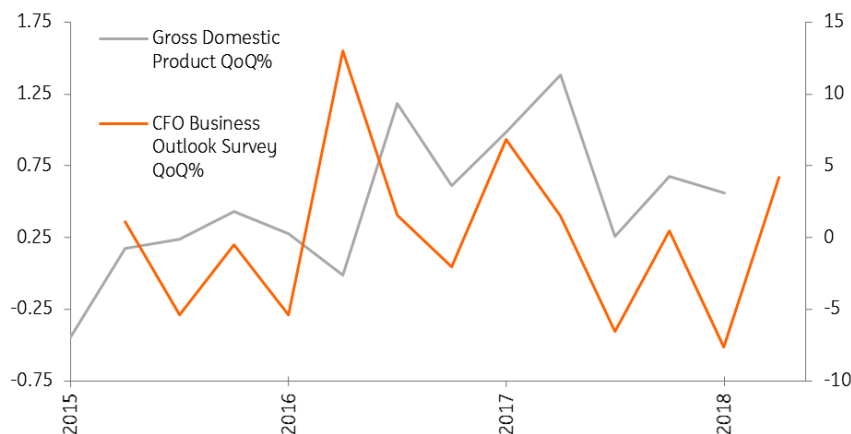

May GDP release

Rebounding retail sales will support growth

As far as Canada's economic performance is concerned, signs of damage from US trade tensions are pretty limited. That's the story we expect to see in the May GDP figure - released tomorrow - where we forecast growth to have increased by 0.4% month-on-month. As we saw in Q1, manufacturing will be a key driver as it continues to benefit from solid global demand, particularly in the US. Accompanying this is the strong rebound of retail sales in May (+2%MoM) - it appears the sunny weather has tempted Canadian consumers to open their wallets and splash out on summer fashions and building/garden projects.

More hikes on the way

Meanwhile, June inflation saw the biggest year on year increase (+2.5%) in six years and coupled with strong growth; it leads us to predict the Bank of Canada will follow July's rate hike with another one later this year. The Bank continues to think that contributions from investments and exports will be around double of what they were in 2017, as robust global growth offsets the so far "moderate" impact of tariffs.

Source: Macrobond

Nafta and trade tensions aren't enough to knock Canadian resilience - just yet

All that said, the broadening of tariffs has clearly increased tensions, and this remains a major risk to Canada. Nafta talks are notably stagnant at the moment, and this is expected to stretch out until after the US mid-term elections in November, prolonging the period of uncertainty for Canadian firms. This could gradually sap confidence and eventually lead to weaker capex spending and worker hiring.

On the bright side, economic data tells us Canada will continue to reap the rewards of a mighty US economy, underlined by last Friday's bumper 2Q GDP report. We are confident the momentum in the US economy will continue for at least a few more quarters given the massive fiscal stimulus (tax cuts and spending increases) that are still working their way through the system.

For now, the direction of interest rates is upwards, but a post-summer escalation in trade tensions and or breakdown in Nafta talks remains the key risk.

Author

James Knightley

Chief International Economist, US

james.knightley@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. (“ING”) solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user’s investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit <http://www.ing.com>.