

Ireland's boom continues, for now

The Irish economy appears to be going from strength to strength, growing rapidly following a solid start to 2023. Ireland isn't immune to global headwinds, however, and growth expectations could soon begin to slow as high inflation, rising interest rates and weaker global demand take their toll

Global headwinds weigh on surging growth

It was a confusing start to the year for the Irish economy. We saw GDP shrink by 4.6% quarter-on-quarter – mainly driven by multinational-dominated sectors – while the domestic economy actually bounced back from a few weaker quarters and grew by 2.7%. This signals continued strength in the overall trend for Ireland and suggests that the boom of recent years has not yet come to an end. This year, we continue to expect the Irish economy to outperform compared to its European peers – although Ireland is also not immune to broader drivers of weakness. As a result, high inflation, higher interest rates and weaker global demand are dampening the growth outlook for the year ahead.

Modified domestic demand saw a strong bounce back from weakness at the end of 2022

Source: CSO

Purchasing power and business expectations to provide support

The services sector continues to be a very strong driver of economic activity in Ireland at the moment. The PMI for services was at 57 in June, well above the eurozone average and indicative of strong expansion. The manufacturing PMI indicates contraction, although traditional industrial production continues to show strong year-on-year growth. The strong service sector reflects large business services activities, but also strong domestic consumption activity. Unemployment stands at a very low 3.8%. Wage growth trends above 4% at the moment, not too far from where inflation sits. Over the course of the year, purchasing power is set to improve again, which should provide further support for consumption activity.

The housing market, however, is starting to turn. Price growth has been negative for a few months, although the latest data suggests a bottoming out. Mortgage approvals have increased again in March and April, which adds to tentative signs of a bottom. Keep in mind the full impact of higher interest rates may still have to play out. Still, the market remains tight with structural undersupply, which dampens the negative effect of higher rates on Irish housing. Construction activity is set to rebound in the months ahead. While the PMI has been negative for some time, commencements have been on the rise again and business expectations have been improving. Expect this to support the economy over the rest of the year.

Strength in government finances accompanies economic boom

Overall, this strong economic performance – to a large degree fuelled by multinational activity – is resulting in sound government finances. Windfall corporate taxes are an important contributor to that. Talk of a sovereign wealth fund also appears to be emerging, which is a luxury that many eurozone countries would only dream of. In the fourth quarter of 2022, Irish government debt stood at 44.7% of GDP, which is more than 10 percentage points down from the previous year. Clearly, the economic boom is now accompanied by a strong improvement in government finances.

Author

Bert Colijn

Chief Economist, Netherlands

bert.colijn@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. (“ING”) solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user’s investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit www.ing.com.