

Optimistic Bank of Canada bucks the dovish dollar-bloc trend

A more upbeat Bank of Canada has edged back from the more dovish line it struck in April, as policymakers grow more confident that the earlier slowdown was temporary. Unlike in other dollar-bloc economies, we think Canadian interest rates will remain on hold through 2019

Source: Bank of Canada

The market vs policymakers – who's right?

The Bank of Canada (BoC) kept interest rates on hold at 1.75% at Wednesday's meeting, but more importantly, the central bank is showing no inclination to begin loosening policy, despite the recent flare-up in global trade tensions.

Having taken a more dovish line back in April, the Governing Council struck a more upbeat tone on growth, which it expects to regain momentum over the next few quarters. This follows a recent interview, where BoC governor Stephen Poloz mentioned how – once growth headwinds dissipate – interest rates could feasibly start rising again. This suggests that the medium-term policy bias is still, if anything, tilted slightly towards further tightening.

In contrast, markets are now not far off pricing in a full rate cut over the next 12 months, while a 3-month bill is now yielding more than a 10-year bond.

The 3-month vs. 10-year yield curve has reached inversion (again)

Source: Macrobond

First-quarter growth: Already bottomed out for the year?

Friday's first-quarter GDP report is due on Friday, and while growth may be slightly higher than seen in the final quarter of last year, the underlying details could be more lacklustre:

1. The trade deficit was reported to be the largest since the second quarter of 2016.
2. The manufacturing PMI broke below the 50-threshold in April, thereby entering contraction territory.
3. Construction starts were down 9.9% in 1Q19, indicating that a material housing market recovery could be some way off.

1.1% ING 1Q19 GDP forecast
QoQ, annualised

Nevertheless, as we enter the second half of the year the picture looks a little more promising. Here are 3 reasons why:

1 Green light for USMCA ratification

There has finally been some brighter news on the United-States-Mexico-Canada-Agreement (USMCA). US metal tariffs and both Canada and Mexico's retaliatory tariffs were removed on Friday, 17 May. While there are still some key Democratic objections left to be resolved with certain areas of the agreement, we think that the elimination of tariffs – coupled with recent reports that US Vice President Mike Pence is putting pressure on Congress to pass the deal by summer end – suggests that ratification is ultimately possible (read here for a more detailed analysis).

2 US-China trade war: Things will get worse before they get better, but a deal is still probable

Trade tensions between the US and China have flared up once again and the risk that President Trump imposes tariffs on the remaining basket of Chinese goods, or on global car imports, is rising. This could be coupled with further retaliation from China, which could take the form of measures designed to make it harder for US businesses to operate in the country. In other words, things could get worse before they get better, but our base case remains that a deal is still ultimately probable. If this is the case, it would remove a big cloud from the global outlook – including in Canada.

3 Better economic data could be on its way

The strength of the labour market has recently been one of the only bright spots in the economy. But when you incorporate the effects of the ongoing recovery from the late-2018 oil price decline, as well as some indications that the housing market will emerge out of its current slump, we anticipate economic growth will slowly begin to regain some momentum as we enter the second half of the year.

In our view, the Bank of Canada is likely to remain firmly on hold throughout the course of this year – although a lot depends on how the global trade war evolves, how the Fed subsequently responds, as well as what happens domestically following the federal election campaigning process.

Author

James Smith

Developed Markets Economist

james.smith@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit <http://www.ing.com>.