

Pang: A stark warning about China's future growth

China's growth prospects are looking shaky and our Chief Economist for Greater China, Iris Pang, is worried. Here's why

A stark warning about China's future growth

The prospects for growth in China have unexpectedly weakened. So says ING's Iris Pang in Hong Kong. She's concerned about a decline in investment in equipment linked to the global semiconductor chip shortage. But there's more to it than that. International politics are playing a big role as are internal reforms which are heightening credit risk. And, of course, no one is sure how the coronavirus pandemic will unfold in the coming year.
