

Patterson: Gas prices are soaring. Here's what might bring them down

ING's Head of Commodity Strategy, Warren Patterson, tells us exactly why natural gas prices are at record highs. But he also says there are several potential catalysts which could lead to a downward correction

Gas prices are soaring. Here's what might bring them down

The cost of gas has been soaring this year. The so-called TTF prices are up by more than 250% this year and there's potential for them to go even higher. ING's Warren Patterson looks at why we're seeing this right now. But he says there are also several potential catalysts that can bring prices down.
