

Riksbank: Don't rule out a hike this week amid hawkish pivot

In stark contrast to its February forecasts, Sweden's Riksbank could hike rates as soon as this week. More likely though, policymakers will lay the groundwork for a June hike and several more thereafter. The Riksbank should continue to be a broadly supportive factor for SEK in the coming months

This week's policy decision can continue to offer support to the krona

Riksbank set to lay the groundwork for a June rate hike

Sweden's Riksbank has long sat at the dovish end of the central bank spectrum, and only in February was it formally projecting no change in the repo rate before 2024.

Fast forward a few weeks and the story couldn't be more different. Admittedly those rate projections were never likely to survive for long, and indeed in our last forecast update at the start of the month we brought forward our forecast for the first rate hike to September.

But since then, several board members have floated the possibility of much earlier rate rises. That includes Governor Stefan Ingves who, when asked, offered very little pushback against the 10 rate hikes that are roughly priced into financial markets over the next couple of years. A rate hike this week certainly shouldn't be ruled out, though we suspect policymakers will be more inclined to lay the groundwork for an increase in June.

Swedish inflation has come in much higher than the Riksbank's forecasts

It's not hard to find the source of the recent hawkish turn. Headline CPI inflation came in above 6% in March, well ahead of the 3.8% Riksbank forecast from February. Big updates to the projections are inevitable.

This is important in the context of wage negotiations, which occur on a three-year cycle, and are due to conclude next spring. Higher headline inflation rates mean there's a growing chance that these talks will result in a higher outcome than during the 2020 round. The jobs market is tight, and labour shortages are as acute as they were in 2018 when the unemployment rate last troughed. Inflation expectations among employer and employee organisations are increasing too.

In short, we expect the Riksbank to endorse a rate hike each quarter this year, starting in June. We doubt the new interest rate projection will go as far as markets, which are pricing a terminal rate in the region of 2.5%. But we wouldn't be surprised to see the Riksbank pencilling in at least another 2-3 hikes in 2023 and 2024. All of this is likely to be coupled with a reduction in the size of the balance sheet, most likely starting in the third quarter (2Q purchases have already been announced).

Inflation expectations among wage negotiators have been rising

FX: More support to the krona, but watch for external risks

The radical shift in the Riksbank's rhetoric and the market's increasingly hawkish repricing of rate expectations in Sweden have combined to offer some meaningful support to the krona, with EUR/SEK now trading around pre-Ukraine-war levels. That surely implied some reduction in the geopolitical risk premium embedded into European assets.

This week's policy decision can continue to offer support to the krona. Naturally, a rate hike this Thursday would likely see SEK rally, but we also think that a hawkish shift in the rate projections and some endorsement of the market's tightening expectations (which have been always significantly ahead of the curve) can be enough to put some mild pressure on EUR/SEK. We think only a clear pushback against market pricing would have a material negative impact on SEK.

In our view, the Riksbank should continue to be a broadly supportive factor for SEK in the coming months. However, the external environment should continue to prove quite challenging for the krona, which may suffer from its high beta to both a) global risk sentiment – at a time where global tightening cycles (as well a prolonged Ukraine conflict) can hit risk appetite and b) eurozone's economic outlook – which should start to show the negative impact of high energy prices and the war in Ukraine.

These factors mean, in our view, that EUR/SEK risks are by and large balanced for Q2, and we expect it to hover around the 10.40 mark into the summer months. Later in the year, some stabilisation in sentiment and the Riksbank's advantage over the ECB in the tightening cycle can push EUR/SEK to the 10.20-10.00 area.

Authors

James Smith

Developed Markets Economist

james.smith@ing.com

Francesco Pesole

FX Strategist

francesco.pesole@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit <http://www.ing.com>.