

Watch: The final destination for Europe's electric vehicle spat with China

As trade tensions mount between China and the European Union, notably over subsidies on electric vehicles, what's the likelihood of a negotiated solution? Our economists in Frankfurt and Hong Kong look at what's at stake

The final destination of Europe's electric car battle with China

Talks between China and the European Union continue as trade tensions mount. Electric vehicles are in focus; the EU thinks they're being unfairly subsidised. China's hitting back with 'unfair trade' accusations. So, what is going on? And how might this end? We get the views from our economists in Germany and Hong Kong.
