

Watch: Trump's 90-day tariff reprieve is nearly up. So, now what?

The tariff clock is ticking loudly again. Reciprocal tariffs ranging from 11% to 50% will be reinstated on 9 July unless formal trade agreements are established. As ING's Inga Fechner explains, this will have major implications for global trade and financial markets

Trump's 90-day tariff reprieve is nearly up. So, now what?

If you thought that Donald Trump's global tariff threat had faded, think again. The 90-day tariff reprieve he announced after his so-called 'Liberation Day' is due to expire on 9 July. And that could have major implications for global trade, not least with the European Union. Talks between the US and the EU are said to be 'tense'. ING's Inga Fechner tells us what might happen next.
