

End of an era

US Treasury Secretary Mnuchin discards strong dollar policy

ripped dollar

The genie is now out of the bottle

US Treasury Secretaries have had a difficult time convincing markets that they were real advocates of the strong dollar policy. Hank Paulson had his work cut out to persuade markets, and even then many interpreted his remarks as being more in keeping with an "appropriately priced market-determined" dollar policy. Tim Geithner, early on in his Treasury career also had a few stumbles, and had to do a fair bit of back-peddling to get markets back onside.

The problem is, of course, that once you tell markets that you are not really bothered about the value of your currency because it is expedient at the time to take that attitude, the cost of persuading them otherwise, should this be what you need in the future, is magnified many times.

The current US Treasury Secretary, Steven Mnuchin, let the Genie out of the bottle at Davos yesterday when he suggested that a weak dollar is actually good news, as it supports US trade. The USD decline was already well established, so Mnuchin's comments were pushing on an open door.

We have said before that a weak USD is helpful for Asian economies as it enables local central banks to go easy on monetary normalisation, and support domestic economies. But this view does not extend to rapid, and potentially disorderly USD declines, which could spur the Fed into more aggressive tightening, and raising bond yields worldwide. That is certainly not an environment that benefits Asia.

How will Draghi counter Mnuchin?

We had been holding open the possibility that European Central Bank President, Mario Draghi, might offer up some tantalizing taper hints at the press conference today - in line with the comments expressed in the ECB's last minutes. Now, Draghi is likely to adopt a damage limitation mode. We don't believe the EUR has exceeded the ECB's pain threshold line, which is probably somewhere around the 1.25 level. But rate of change can be as important as level for central banks, and so throwing more fuel on the fire with a hawkish testimony today would be counter-productive.

The problem is, would anyone believe Draghi if he offered a view in stark contrast to the minutes? This is reminiscent of the Emperor's New Clothes tale. And in true pantomime style, if Draghi tells the assembled press at today's conference that the Eurozone economy still needs emergency stimulus in the form of QE and negative rates, it would not be wholly inappropriate if they all shouted out "Oh no it doesn't". All that would be missing from the picture would be someone dressed as Widow Twankee.

Asia today - Malaysia should still hike.

Despite the USD weakness, and the MYR breaching 3.90, we still look for Bank Negara Malaysia to hike rates by 25bp today to 3.25%. Please follow the link to see further discussion of our thoughts on this central bank decision.

<https://think.ing.com/articles/malaysian-central-bank-to-join-tightening-binge/>

Author

Robert Carnell

Regional Head of Research, Asia-Pacific

robert.carnell@asia.ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit <http://www.ing.com>.