

Opinion | 2 July 2018

INDONESIA JAPAN

EUR whipped around by Merkel fears

The euro is swinging around on the spat between German Chancellor Angela Merkel's CDU party and their Bavarian CSU coalition partners - a weaker euro typically means weaker Asian FX.

Source: Shutterstock

It's miles away, but the German political tussle could be important in Asia

One of the biggest selling jobs I have is to persuade a US-focussed Asian clientele that they also need to keep an eye out on Europe. Right now would be a very good time to do that. The political argument between Germany's Chancellor, Angela Merkel, her CDU party and the coalition CSU party over immigration has reached new heights, with the CSU's Horst Seehofer (Interior Minister under the coalition) threatening to resign over the deal struck by EU leaders at the end of last week. This deal, which would facilitate the removal of immigrants back to their country of arrival in the EU, does not seem to have gone far enough for some of the CSU leadership, including Seehofer.

At the moment, the CDU are overwhelmingly backing Merkel, and that is providing the EUR with a little support. But if that shifts and the coalition looks threatened, then as well as the EUR, which would soften abruptly, at stake would be Merkel's chancellorship, the Schengen border arrangement, some might even say the future of the EU itself (though that might be going a little far).

So what? Well if that happens and the US dollar strengthens by default, then Asian FX will be unilaterally weaker, inflation will rise, and central banks will need to take a more hawkish rate stance, weighing on domestic demand. Right now, that is the last thing the global market needs. So, don't ignore Europe!

Worth also giving the Mexican elections a quick squiz

I am going well off-piste when I say that Asian investors might want to give the Mexican elections a once-over too. With the votes not yet counted, newswires seem to believe that that the left-leaning Andres Manuel Lopez Obrador will win a landslide.

Markets are anxious. Left-leaning politicians are regarded as less market-friendly than right leaning ones. Moreover, Obrador has apparently taken a tough line on US trade policy and NAFTA negotiations. Opening up trade wounds with the US at this juncture seems like pouring fuel on the already smoldering trade fire. This could provoke a more generalized risk-off sentiment in financial markets. Not good for Asian FX.

Tankan - not so cheery now

Japan's Tankan survey still commands some interest in markets, given the choppiness of the GDP data, and its message today was a modestly negative one. I say modestly because although the headline index for large manufacturers was down more than expected, the 'outlook' index for the same group of firms actually ticked up a point (not clear why). Also, the capex intentions were also stronger than had been expected, though this is typically a back-weighted index, so it was always likely to rise to some degree as we move through the year. If nothing else, this data suggests that current momentum is stronger than was previously thought, though coming off faster. Smaller firms too and the non-manufacturing sector also held up better than the headline index. Though overall GDP growth in Japan is still tightly linked to the manufacturing production cycle, and this is clearly weakening.

Asia week ahead

After last week's Bank Indonesia 50bp hike, which could provide some (though perhaps short-lived) support to the rupiah today, there isn't too much central bank action in the region this week. Australia's Reserve Bank is thought unlikely to hike rates at all this year, so we doubt we will get so much as a hint at policy direction from them, though, following last week's RBNZ suggestion that rates can go down as well as up, there is always a risk their bigger neighbour might follow suit.

The week is otherwise dominated by PMI data (today) which could indicate the degree to which trade tensions are already hurting in advance of Friday's implementation of tariffs by China and the US (Canadian levies took effect on Sunday, whisky and jam...). Inflation data is the other big print this week. Today delivers Thai and Indonesian inflation, later in the week, Taiwan, Korea and the Philippines all release their price data. A soft print on the Indonesian figure (was 3.23% in May), may help BI to persuade markets that its hikes are working...

Korean trade figures released over the weekend weren't brilliant, but they weren't too bad either. The 0.1%YoY decline in exports overstates the downside for a choppy figure that seems in levels terms to be growing slowly, after flattening out through the second half of 2017 and early 2018. Imports are rising more strongly, and the trade surplus will likely narrow over the rest of the year if this pattern continues. That isn't particularly worrying if the import story reflects stronger domestic demand. Although that story could do with a bit more support to become convincing.

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit www.ing.com.