

Markets - still happy

We wrote yesterday that markets seemed happier. Today, the Pollyanna market trend continues stronger than ever with a big sell-off in the US Treasury market. Brexit, US macro and trade-related news are all feeding this feel-good factor. I can't help feeling that there are two sides to all these stories.

First, the US data...

A surprisingly strong non-manufacturing ISM index yesterday is good news and undoubtedly helped fuel the sense that things in the US are still holding together remarkably well. But this divergence with the manufacturing sector, which has dipped into contraction this month, is unusual. OK, the manufacturing sector is not the powerhouse it once was, but the service sector still usually dances in tune with it, for no better reason than that manufacturing often drives demand for services - transport, insurance, storage etc. Divergence can occur - as it did back in 2015 - and can persist for some time. Back then, the non-mfg ISM eventually descended to come into line with the mfg series. I suspect that will be repeated this time too. So whilst welcome, I'm a bit cautious about how long this situation can last.

We also have some more colour on the impact the trade war is having on the US in the form of the Challenger Gray and Christmas labour survey. This long-standing report is now asking a question in its monthly survey about jobs that are lost due to trade-related difficulties. Last month, this apparently accounted for more than 10,000 job losses, though I should add that we lack any history for this to make sensible deductions about whether this is particularly bad, or quite normal. It sounds high though.

Strong ADP data too (+195,000) are helpful ahead of today's non-farm payrolls. It's worth bearing in mind though, that any outside payrolls figure today could contain an upwards distortion from hiring for the 2020 census - according to some reports I have read, this could amount to a 40,000 contribution to today's number. The private/total payrolls split will be worth a second glance later.

Anyway, for the expert view, please refer to James Knightley's note (see link).

Manufacturing and non-manufacturing ISM

Trade talks in October

Markets are also taking a pre-weekend happy-pill from confirmation that the US and China will resume trade talks in October. But while talks are better than no talks, ask yourself this question: "Is the US about to scale back its demands on China to secure a trade deal?" If not, "Is China about to relinquish its stance on state-owned enterprises or intellectual property?". If the answer to either of these questions is "No", then this is not a rally you should probably be chasing (I think the answer to both is no, and that October may result in a further increase in tariffs and retaliation).

Indeed, the US has reason to believe that its tough stance on China is having results, at least if the bilateral deficit with China is any guide (see also this from Knightley).

Furthermore, as my colleague Iris Pang points out this morning the US is not making it easy for China to be more flexible: She says, "The US has just sent nine Chinese students from Arizona State University back to China after they were detained at the airport. And, the US has also claimed that Huawei's case will not be discussed at the October meeting. This suggests that the US may not be ready to give any concessions to China. Recently, China's stance has been very firm on 1) requesting the US to respect China setting its own pace to enhance its own laws, including on intellectual property law; and 2) to lift all imposed tariffs before a deal can be reached. These two items make the room for discussion very small".

Moreover, it is not like we have not been here before. Financial markets are behaving like a dim-witted but adorable puppy that you keep giving a rubber bone instead of the juicy steak it thinks you have for it. It is very sweet that it keeps falling for the same gag over and over again, but really...?

Brexit - is this really good news

Even the Brexit farce seems to be playing into the market's optimism today, and the GBP has pulled back from GBPUSD1.20 to closer to 1.24 today.

But this seems to be because the UK may not now crash out of the EU on October 31. It may still crash out. And I can't see how an election helps. But here is James Smith for a possibly less jaundiced view of all of this.

That's it for 2 weeks!

This will be the last note from me for 2 weeks or so, as I board the flying bar that is the non-stop flight from Singapore to Newark, US tonight. I'm looking forward to catching up with Knightley et al, and returning with my tales from America in 2 weeks time.

Until then, good luck!

Author

Robert Carnell

Regional Head of Research, Asia-Pacific

robert.carnell@asia.ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit <http://www.ing.com>.