

The end of the week is near

That's the end of the week in case you misread the title, not the end of the world. But if you were long stocks right now, what would you do as Friday nears, payrolls looms and a weekend of new virus news approaches...?

roulette

Source: Shutterstock

Market optimism seems misplaced

Each morning, before turning on my PC and opening Bloomberg, I scan the newswires for the key headlines. Then, as a sort of test, I try to guess which direction equities have moved overnight. It is not as easy as you would think, which shows that there is far more going on in markets than just a response to "new news".

This morning, I was wrong. Looking for reasons why stocks should have risen yesterday, I came up with the following excuses:

- Joe Biden's strong performance on Super Tuesday reduces the likelihood of a Sanders Presidential run - markets are worried about higher taxes under Sanders.
- Talk about the G7 finance Ministers commitment to action (yet they didn't actually promise anything, and market response on the day itself was underwhelming, surely this is old news)

- And more old news in the form of talking up central bank actions (BoC cut 50bp yesterday, but the BoE didn't change rates).

This Friday, we get what is normally a market-moving economic release, non-farm-payrolls. I, fortunately, don't have the job of forecasting this any more, though spent most of my career having to do so, and didn't exactly cover myself in glory. Frankly, its a lottery.

Then in the US, the CDC appears to be ramping up its testing for the Covid-19 virus. This seems likely to deliver more market-negative higher confirmed case numbers over the weekend, and, who knows, perhaps very much higher in the US. The case numbers in Europe seem to be escalating in a worrying fashion (most importantly, threatening my forthcoming French holiday), and I don't know about you, but if this were a game of roulette and red was down and black up, I would be eyeing the red squares keenly.

And another thing...

While we watch the non-China new Covid-19 cases carefully, let's not lose sight of China in all of this. It is tempting to assume that they are now more or less out of the woods, but as my colleague Iris notes this morning, there are risks. She writes "There are reported cases of positive testing Covid-19 infected patients who had tested negative two to three times before being released from hospital. This raises questions about whether these "returned" positive cases could spread the virus further.

It looks as if there are three risks now in China on Covid-19:

1. a crowded workforce returning to work;
2. imported Covid-19 cases; and
3. "returned positive" cases.

Any of these, if not controlled properly, could result in another peak of Covid-19 in China, and could move the market negatively".

And in the ASEAN region, there is this from Prakash Sakpal:

"Thailand: February CPI is due today. The high base effect in the key CPI components of food and transport likely pulled inflation down to 0.8% YoY from 1.1% in December. As Covid-19 is weakening demand further, persistent excess capacity limits price pressure from the supply side. We see inflation staying below the Bank of Thailand's 1-3% policy goal over the rest of the year and the central bank cutting rates again at the March meeting. The Finance Ministry is mulling a THB 100 billion (0.6% of 2019 GDP) stimulus to soften the impact of the virus. We are sceptical any of these policy measures reviving the economy this year.

Singapore: January retail sales today will reinforce the message of continued weak consumer spending. We expect a steeper fall than December's -3.4% YoY. An accelerated decline in automobile sales evident from a 39% YoY fall in new vehicle registrations in January is to be blamed here. Hopes remain pinned on the record fiscal stimulus reviving demand, though that's probably something for the second half of the year. The recession looks more likely than not in the first half".

There's not much else to focus on in terms of economic releases today and nothing that will overshadow Friday's payrolls.

Good luck over the weekend (no note from me tomorrow).

Stay safe and keep those hands washed!

Author

Robert Carnell

Regional Head of Research, Asia-Pacific

robert.carnell@asia.ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit <http://www.ing.com>.