

Wobble but no bust

Tech stocks tumble, but the broader market shrugs off concerns

This is not the break we were looking for

We wrote yesterday that markets would not keep range-trading forever, but the overnight sell-off in tech stocks looks equity-specific and has seen little reverberation in either bonds or currencies. EURUSD is up a bit in the last 24 hours, but nothing substantial, and has barely dented last week's softness. Other currencies - JPY for example, are similarly unfazed. 10Y Treasury bond yields, which you might have expected to dip on equity weakness, are more or less unchanged. In short, this is no break-out. That continues to loom out there, though what the catalyst for this will be...?

Cheer if you're a Brexiteer

The UK has achieved agreement to a transition deal with the EU as it leaves the Union. GBP has bounced a little on the news. The deal gives the UK a 21 month transition period with the EU, in which it can negotiate and sign trade deals with other countries, so long as they don't come into force until after the end of the transition. EU arrivals into the UK during this time will be treated no different to EU citizens already living in the country. There is still no resolution to the issue of the Irish border. That will have to be found before a final deal can be struck later this year, and if no solution is discovered, then this still has the potential to fall apart.

But if we take an optimistic spin, this at least now paves the way for the UK to start discussing trade options with the EU. That will be no picnic.

Day ahead

Inflation in the UK is the top pick for the G-7 economic calendar today. Inflation should ease back down from 3.0% in January to something like 2.8% in February, taking some of the pressure off the Bank of England to raise rates, though we suspect that it will keep a hawkish tone when it meets later this week. None of the Bloomberg forecasting community is looking for a hike, and indeed, the window for any threatened tightening for the BoE is a narrow one, closing after the summer as Brexit talks are likely to get more heated as the end-date draws near.

It is a quiet day in Asia-Pacific. The expected decline in house price inflation reported today is just one reason why there is no expectation for the Reserve Bank of Australia to follow the fed and hike rates anytime soon. We get minutes from the RBA's 6 March meeting later today. They will likely confirm the lack of any imminent tightening.

Author

Robert Carnell

Regional Head of Research, Asia-Pacific

robert.carnell@asia.ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit www.ing.com.