Podcast | 22 October 2020

Listen: How the US election will impact Europe

Foreign policy is unlikely to determine the outcome of the US presidential election on 3 November, with voters more concerned about jobs and healthcare, but it’s profoundly important to America’s allies. In this podcast, ING s Carsten Brzeski looks at what the outcome of the vote could mean for Europe s economy over the next four years

President Trump's 'America First' policy has been criticised by rival Joe Biden as an isolationist strategy that has left America alone in the world, turning former allies into adversaries. The European Union may be a case in point. Faced with threats of tariffs and sanctions, trade relations have soured in recent years, with Trump calling Europe a "foe" which is "almost as bad as China". In this podcast, ING's Global Head of Macro Carsten Brzeski tells Senior Editor Rebecca Byrne how the coming election could influence transatlantic relations and Europe's economy.

Author

Carsten Brzeski
Global Head of Macro
carsten.brzeski@ing.de

Rebecca Byrne
Deputy Global Head of Editorial and Supervisory Analyst
rebecca.byrne@ing.com

Disclaimer