

Bank of Canada hits bottom

The Bank of Canada has cut rates 50bp to 0.25% and announced a C$5bn+/week QE programme in another unscheduled announcement

Bank of Canada
Governor Stephen
Poloz

The Bank of Canada has cut its policy rate by 50bp to 0.25% – “its effective lower bound” according to the accompanying statement. It will also be starting its first-ever quantitative easing (QE) programme, with the central bank purchasing “a minimum of C$5bn per week, across the yield curve”. This is open ended and can be adjusted as required. The Bank is also launching a commercial paper purchase programme “to help alleviate strains in short-term funding markets and thereby preserve a key source of funding for business”. In the press conference Governor Poloz stated that today’s moves are primarily about easing strains in financial markets that have seen an effective freeze in the commercial paper market.

This aggressive response was increasingly expected given the moves seen by other central banks around the world and the financial market tensions. Moreover, Canada is heavily exposed to the global downturn given nearly a third of economic activity is tied to global trade while the plunge in commodity prices compounds the problems for Canada’s economy. This poses huge risks for employment and investment, particularly in the oil and gas industries.

The Bank also cites the substantial fiscal package announced by the government, but we have to remember that all of these measures are about damage control. Recession is unavoidable given the huge changes to regular daily life, the shuttering of numerous businesses and the dislocations in financial and credit markets in response to the Covid-19 crisis.

In the subsequent press conference, Governor Poloz doesn't rule out the potential use of negative interest rates despite the statement saying the BoC is at the "effective lower bound". They are in the "tool kit", but given the hit it would cause to banks and its dubious success in Europe it is not being seriously considered. We don't think it will happen with the BoC adjusting the pace of QE and the range of assets purchases as the main avenue for more stimulus.

Author

James Knightley

Chief International Economist, US

james.knightley@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit <http://www.ing.com>.