

Bank of England raises rates; its tone is surprising

The Bank of England raises interest rates, but a surprising tone of caution suggests future hikes are not guaranteed

Source: Bank of England

0.5%

Bank of England interest rate

From 0.25%

It's no surprise that the Bank of England has taken the historic decision to hike rates for the first time since the financial crisis. But the big news is that the Bank is no longer telling markets that their rate expectations are too low. Markets have roughly two hikes priced in over the next three years, one of which towards the end of next year. There were other signs of caution too. The vote was not unanimous, with two MPC members dissenting against a hike.

Brexit appears to have featured more prominently in the Bank's thinking and phrases like "considerable risks to the outlook" suggest the Bank is now more wary about the risks to investment. True, there have been some more encouraging signs on the Brexit front recently; it's looking increasingly possible that a transition deal can be agreed early next year. But big question marks still hang over what the final deal might look like. Until then, we suspect investment is unlikely to make a massive come back and growth will remain fairly sluggish.

The bank is still fairly bullish on wage growth. The committee still expects this to really take-off next year – the Bank's 3% forecast for 2018 would be a significant pick-up on this year. There has been some renewed momentum in wage growth of late, although some of this is down to the National Living Wage increase. And given that political uncertainty remains elevated, and firms' margins are still being squeezed by higher import costs, we think wages may not pick-up quite as rapidly as the Bank is hoping.

In short, there are still a lot of "ifs". We don't rule out a second hike at some stage next year – it's worth noting that the Bank appears comfortable with having one extra increase priced in for 2018. But that relies on the data, in particular on wage growth, improving and, more importantly, Brexit going smoothly. Until many of these uncertainties are cleared up, we're still yet to be convinced that the Bank will hike much further, if at all.

Author

James Smith

Developed Markets Economist, UK

james.smith@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit www.ing.com.