

Snap | 19 July 2018 United Kingdom

Cracks in UK retail likely to resurface, despite higher sales

Warm weather and World Cup fever helped retailers in the second quarter. But the challenges of low real income growth and depressed consumer confidence are likely to resurface over coming months

Source: iStock

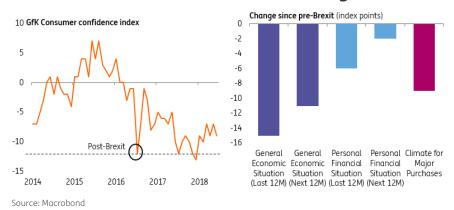

There's little doubt that the retail sector has had a better second quarter than the first – although admittedly the bar was pretty low. Despite a small correction in June, the 2.1% increase in retail sales during the second quarter was the largest since 2015. That came as World Cup fever and warm weather swept the nation, which according to the British Retail Consortium, has boosted sales of items from beer to TVs.

The big question now is whether this better second quarter will be followed by a sustained recovery through the rest of the year. At this stage, we aren't convinced. Once these short-term tailwinds fade – it's only a matter of time before the rain clouds reappear – the underlying challenges facing the sector are likely to resurface.

Real incomes remain under pressure from higher petrol prices (which rose by around 7% in 2Q), while consumer confidence remains depressed. Interestingly, this pessimism is being predominantly driven by concern about the general economic situation, suggesting consumers are still wary of how Brexit may impact their finances and job security. With increased talk about the possibility of "no deal", this caution is only likely to increase.

Snap | 19 July 2018 1

How consumer confidence has changed since the Brexit vote

For now though, given that most indicators have pointed to an overall rebound in activity during the second quarter, we think the Bank of England will be comfortable with hiking rates in August. But after that, Brexit uncertainty, pressures in the retail sector, as well as moderating core inflation, could make it increasingly difficult for the Bank of England to hike again later this year.

Once the BoE has hiked in August, we currently don't expect any further rate rises before May next year, at the earliest.

Author

James Smith Developed Markets Economist, UK james.smith@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Snap | 19 July 2018 2

 $Additional\ information\ is\ available\ on\ request.\ For\ more\ information\ about\ ING\ Group,\ please\ visit\ \underline{www.ing.com}.$

Snap | 19 July 2018 3