

Snap | 18 July 2024

The ECB's gentle start to the summer season

The European Central Bank has kept rates unchanged and has refrained from providing any further forward guidance

There's the expected gentle start to the European summer season. The ECB just announced its decision to keep all policy interest rates unchanged. The official policy statement did not provide any new clues on the central bank's future path, but confirmed that it has for now given up on forward guidance.

There haven't been a lot of important data releases since the ECB's June meeting. If anything, the latest data has pointed to weaker growth, lower headline inflation but still sluggish core and services inflation. In more detail, dropping confidence indicators in June and weak hard data for May underline that the eurozone's economic recovery has lost steam. At the same time, inflation has been broadly in line with ECB forecasts, even if sticky services inflation and continued wage pressure have increased upward risks to these forecasts. But for now, there simply hasn't been enough new data for the ECB to change course.

Looking ahead, it is important to remember that this is not yet a typical rate-cutting cycle in the eurozone. In the past, easing cycles had always been triggered by recessions or crises. Fortunately, neither of these are currently the case. Therefore, any further rate cuts will not be on autopilot. In fact, it is clear that the ECB will have to find a balance between potential reputational damage and rising concerns about an overly optimistic inflation forecast. The ECB won't have any interest in making the June cut look like a policy mistake over the coming weeks, which would be a strong non-economic argument in favour of another rate cut at the September meeting. At the same time, however, weakening economic momentum, stubbornly high domestic inflation and a risk of elevated wage growth is not a combination to cheer for, and this will make it harder for the hawks to agree on a September cut.

Let's listen to ECB President Christine Lagarde at 2:45pm CET for any potential clues on the ECB's future path – or why she might not want to disrupt the gentle start to the European summer season.

Author

Carsten Brzeski

Global Head of Macro

carsten.brzeski@ing.de

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit www.ing.com.