Rising real wages have made the consumer a vital driver of growth for the economies in Central and Eastern Europe (CEE). But in this increasingly multipolar world, will the region enjoy the longer-term benefits of nearshoring?

We'll explore this topic in our upcoming summer edition of Directional Economics, and in this live webinar, our local team of experts will also present their latest macro views for Poland, Hungary, the Czech Republic, Romania, Bulgaria, Turkey, Ukraine and the CIS.
