

Eurozone economy ends 2018 on a very weak note

The economic sentiment indicator of the European Commission fell in December 2018 to the lowest level since January 2017, reducing the chances of a rate hike in 2019

Anyone looking for fireworks in today's economic data for the eurozone, should look elsewhere. The European Commission's economic sentiment indicator (ESI) fell back to 107.3 in December 2018, from 109.5 in November. The outcome was worse than expected (consensus estimate 108.2). France, on the back of the Yellow Vest protests, saw a significant decline (-2.0), but amongst the bigger countries, Germany (-1.9), Italy (-1.4), the Netherlands (-0.3) and especially Spain (-3.0) also saw a drop in confidence.

Extended weakness

Weakness was widespread across sectors. The export-oriented manufacturing sector (-2.3) felt the pinch from slower growth in the emerging world. But the services sector also saw confidence decline (-1.4). Consumer confidence took a 2.3 point hit, while sentiment in the construction sector also deteriorated. The only bright spot was a small uptick in retail trade confidence, but that only concerns the present situation, as expectations became less upbeat. The worrying news is the fact that the more forward-looking indicators like order books and hiring intentions have also lost momentum, implying that the slowdown might extend into the first half of this year.

In terms of inflationary expectations, the picture is mixed. Selling price expectations increased across the board, but consumer price expectations fell back. We have doubts that slowing demand and the strong euro in effective terms will allow businesses to raise prices. Therefore we do not see much upward inflation potential this year.

Diminishing rate hike expectations

Let's not beat about the bush: this is a bad report, signalling a weak fourth quarter and not promising much better for the first quarter of 2019. These figures confirm our view that the GDP growth forecast for 2019 that the ECB issued only a few weeks ago (1.7%) will have to be downgraded significantly. That strongly reduces the probability of a rate increase this year. We might see at most one deposit rate hike, but the bottom line is that money market rates are likely to remain negative for at least another year.

Author

Peter Vanden Houte

Chief Economist, Belgium, Luxembourg, Eurozone

peter.vandenhoute@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit <http://www.ing.com>.