

Eurozone PMI improves ahead of possible new US tariffs

The March PMI shows cautious further improvement, up to 50.4 from 50.2 in February. Most notably, the manufacturing output PMI soared ahead of a possible further escalation of the trade war. For the first quarter, this means that a positive GDP growth print is likely after stagnation at the end of last year Ahead of a possible further escalation of the trade war with the US, eurozone businesses are becoming slightly more positive about the economic environment. The eurozone economy fell back into stagnation in the final quarter of last year, adding to concerns about structural economic weakness. It looks like the first quarter of this year will show a small return to growth. However, with external demand still very much under pressure and more tariffs looming, the short-term outlook remains modest.

The manufacturing output PMI increased to the highest level in two and a half years (from 48.9 in February to 50.7). This comes as signs of bottoming out become more broad-based. Improving production for now still happens on a shaky foundation as new orders continue to contract, but the contraction of new orders is becoming smaller by the month. Expectations of significant defence and infrastructure investment help optimism about a more sustained recovery – especially in Germany, where the manufacturing PMI soared – but export orders could remain under pressure given the trade war and global sluggish demand.

For services, a possible escalating trade war should be less of a concern. Domestic demand is far more important and with purchasing power improving, this bodes well for further growth. Still, consumer confidence suffers from geopolitical tensions, which therefore means that the services outlook also remains subdued for now.

Price pressures eased in March, which adds to the conundrum that the European Central Bank finds itself in at the moment. At the April meeting, the ECB will ponder whether to continue to ease or pause the cut cycle to see how uncertainty plays out. The March picture that the PMI paints is one of modest improving growth with easing inflation. However, next week could already upend that picture as US tariff announcements and possible European retaliation may change the economic landscape significantly.

Author

Bert Colijn

Chief Economist, Netherlands

bert.colijn@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. (“ING”) solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit www.ing.com.