

Eurozone PMI signals economy almost stalled in January

The PMI fell to 50.7 in January from 51.1, indicating that 1Q is again off to a disappointing start. The lack of recovery in January will add to the heated debate about the state of the economy at today's ECB meeting

Source: Shutterstock

The big question about the eurozone economy is currently when the bottom of the slowdown will be reached. A bounce back was already expected in 4Q, but even at the start of the new year there are few signs of recovery. The rate of output growth was the weakest since mid-2013 and new orders for goods fell for the fourth month in a row, according to the survey. Dropping export orders were again an important factor, indicating that the weaker global growth environment is as much part of the slowdown story as one-off domestic factors.

While the eurozone economy was starting to push the limits of production capacity last year, the PMI indicates that this is less the case at the moment. Backlogs of work are decreasing, indicating that output is being maintained by working through old orders as new orders are coming in at a weaker pace. Declining new orders are also the reason for cooling employment growth in both industry and services at the moment. Still, continued job growth will underpin domestic demand for the coming months.

The weak PMI was heavily influenced by France again, which saw a steepening decline in output, according to the PMI. While the 'yellow vests' may have been an important driver here, the question is whether this is not also reflecting the global slowdown. In Germany, manufacturing did not get the bounce back that was eagerly awaited either. Service sector growth was the driver for a slightly higher composite PMI for Germany. A weak growth rate for the eurozone seems to be in the making for 1Q and questions about how temporary this slowdown is are becoming more prominent.

A cautious ECB is to be expected today and this PMI adds to the growth worries that will be addressed at the governing council meeting. Downside risks have clearly been dominant recently and the ECB is lucky that it does not have to make any big decisions this afternoon on data that reflects a lot of uncertainty about where the eurozone economy is headed this year.

Author

Bert Colijn

Chief Economist, Netherlands

bert.colijn@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit www.ing.com.