

Germany: Dented optimism

A sharp fall in Ifo expectations illustrates how the current lockdown has almost entirely sapped the summer optimism

Source: Shutterstock

When looking at the latest Ifo index, remember that a large part of economic activity is about psychology.

Germany's most prominent leading indicator is losing ground and just recorded the worst monthly drop since April 2013 (excluding this year's Covid-19-related swings).

In November, the Ifo index came in at 90.7, from 92.5 in October - the second consecutive decline. While the current assessment component remained relatively stable at 90.0, from 90.4 in October, the expectations component recorded its largest drop since August 2011 (again excluding this year's Covid-19 swings). In fact, within two months' time, German businesses seem to have lost most of their summer optimism.

Things will get worse before they get better

So the economy is losing momentum and Germany is in the middle of a second lockdown, but will the economy also drop into the contractionary territory?

In our view, a double-dip looks inevitable. Admittedly, the second lockdown will not have the same negative impact on the economy as the first. However, the new lockdown measures are hitting sectors which had already been suffering from the first lockdown, accounting for roughly 10% of total German employment. Also, don't underestimate the psychological impact, which is likely to turn involuntary savings into precautionary savings, and an increased risk of companies going out of business.

The only hope for the economy to avoid a contraction comes from a surprisingly strong manufacturing and export sector. However, as yesterday's PMIs suggested, the manufacturing sector is also losing momentum and with most other eurozone countries in (partial) lockdown, as well as the currently discussed option in Germany to close factories for the last two weeks of the year, it will be very hard for the manufacturing sector to prevent the total economy from falling into contraction.

Today's Ifo index illustrates how the latest lockdown measures in Germany, but also across Europe, have dented the summer optimism. The only upside is that more news about a vaccine and a timetable to roll it out should soon help to bring back this optimism.

Author

Carsten Brzeski

Global Head of Macro

carsten.brzeski@ing.de

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit www.ing.com.