

Germany: This is no rebound

Industrial production disappoints once again, defying any hopes for a quick rebound of the German economy

Hopes for a quick rebound of German industry were short-lived. After yesterday's promising new orders data, industrial production dropped by 0.6% month-on-month in September, from 0.4% MoM in August. On the year, industrial production was down by 4.3%. Activity in the manufacturing industry was down by 1.3% MoM. Activity in the construction sector recovered with an increase of 1.8% MoM in September.

Yesterday, new orders rebounded after two consecutive drops, adding to hopes that the manufacturing sector and with it, the entire economy could finally end the free fall which started in the summer of 2018. However, today's industrial production data shows that any optimism on the outlook for German industry is premature.

Looking ahead, while there has been some stabilisation in confidence indicators, more structural factors in German industry continue to bode ill for industrial production in the coming months. Capacity utilisation has dropped to the lowest level since the first quarter of 2016. In line with lower capacity utilisation, equipment as a limiting factor to production has also eased significantly and even the long pressing issue of the lack of qualified workers is disappearing. The latter clearly provides further evidence that the German labour market is also feeling the economic slowdown. Even in case of some easing of the current trade conflicts and an end to the Brexit uncertainty, it will probably take until the first quarter of next year to see a significant rebound of German industry.

The only upside from this morning's data is the strong rebound in activity in the construction sector. With the September rebound, construction should have been a weak but positive growth driver in the third quarter. Add to this that retail sales were also up on the quarter and a contraction in the third quarter of the entire economy (and therefore a technical recession) is not yet a done deal. So far, we only know that industry is in recession but not necessarily the entire economy. As so often, it will be the export sector, which decides on the fate of the German economy in the third quarter. Stay tuned.

Author

Carsten Brzeski

Global Head of Macro

carsten.brzeski@ing.de

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit www.ing.com.