BI hikes again but downshifts to less aggressive tightening

In a move widely anticipated by market participants, Bank Indonesia (BI) has hiked policy rates by 25bp to 5.5%. Price pressures have abated somewhat, as evidenced by the recent slip in headline inflation and we believe that inflation in Indonesia may have peaked.

The softer inflation reading - combined with the general outlook for growth challenges in 2023 - convinced the central bank that a less forceful rate hike should be rolled out today. A similar downshift in the pace of tightening from global central banks also allowed BI to implement the

Rate hikes set to continue in early 2023

Despite the pullback in the pace of tightening, we believe BI will continue with the current tightening cycle next year. BI believes that the Fed will continue to hike rates in the first half of 2023 and we could see BI following suit with rate hikes of their own. The IDR has come under some pressure to close out 2022 and we believe BI will need to match Fed rate hikes to help maintain FX stability.

With BI's policy rate at 5.5%, IDR should move sideways to close out the year - with investors monitoring the fallout from the recent bond buyback announcement from the national government.
