

Indonesia: Inflation data keeps door open for more rate cuts

December inflation settled at 2.7% from 3.0% in November, affording Bank Indonesia (BI) Governor Perry Warjiyo scope to ease policy further

Lower than expected

December inflation remains subdued

Price pressures remained in check in Indonesia with the December inflation report showing a 2.7% increase from last year, although recent flooding could exert marginal upward pressure in the coming months. A slight acceleration in food items pushed headline prices slightly higher but in general inflation remains well-behaved as core inflation fell below expectations to 3.0% compared to median forecasts for a 3.1% gain.

Door for additional central bank easing remains open

The December inflation print falls below the midpoint of Bank Indonesia's (BI) inflation target of 2.5-4.5%, which should give Governor Warjiyo ample scope to ease policy rates further if growth numbers continue to disappoint. Also reported on Thursday was official PMI manufacturing data, which showed a slight improvement (49.5 in December vs 48.2 previously) however growth momentum appears to be in need of a boost. We expect BI to retain its accommodative stance and unleash another round of easing should fourth quarter growth numbers disappoint and external conditions allow.
