

People's Bank of China surprised markets with a 25bp cut to the five-year loan prime rate

The People's Bank of China kept the one-year loan prime rate (LPR) unchanged at 3.45% as expected, but surprisingly cut the five-year LPR by 25bp to 3.95%, the first time the five-year rate was cut since May 2023

The People's Bank of China in Beijing

25 bp rate cut to the 5-year LPR

Higher than expected

China key interest rates

Five-year LPR cut may be targeting property market recovery

As anticipated, the PBoC kept the 1-year LPR unchanged at 3.45%, mirroring the unchanged Medium-Term Lending Facility decision from the weekend. We believed this key policy rate would likely be kept unchanged in February's decision, as policymakers conserved limited ammunition ahead of a possible broader policy push in the next few months. Given the RMB depreciation pressure amid unfavourable interest rate spreads, we saw limited room for manoeuvre before global central banks shifted toward rate cuts.

However, in a surprise move, the PBoC cut the 5-year LPR was cut by 25bp to 3.95%. While single-sided LPR cuts have occurred in the past, it was always the 1-year rate that was cut while the 5-year rate was maintained. The main justification for this in the past was to preserve banks' net interest margins, as the 5-year LPR is used as the reference rate for mortgages. The February decision was the first time since the LPR came into use in 2019 that the PBoC cut the 5-year LPR while keeping the 1-year LPR unchanged. The 25bp cut was also the largest cut to the 5-year LPR on record.

The cut to the 5-year LPR is likely aimed at supporting the recovery of the property market, and could improve affordability for buyers by lowering the mortgage rates. However, banks were already facing record low net interest margins as of the third quarter of 2023, and have been tasked with extending loans to support troubled property developers. The 5-year LPR cut could add further pressure to Chinese bank margins.

Chinese banks' net interest margins have been under pressure

PBoC is likely to remain on a dovish tilt in coming months

With inflation low and economic momentum still tepid in early 2024, we believe that monetary policy will remain accommodative in China moving forward. We still see room for one more cut to the key 1-year LPR in near term, and a further reserve ratio requirement cut is possible as well. If global central banks do begin rate cuts later in the year, that will likely free up more room for the PBoC to ease policy further.

Author

Lynn Song

Chief Economist, Greater China

lynn.song@asia.ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit <http://www.ing.com>.