

UK wage growth points to summer rate hike

With wage growth sitting at the heart of the Bank of England's rate hike rationale, these latest encouraging figures suggest markets may be underestimating the risk of a summer move

Source: istock

As markets become increasingly sceptical about the prospects of a UK rate hike this year, the latest wage data could prompt a bit of a rethink.

At 2.9%, earnings growth excluding bonuses is now running at the fastest rate since mid-2015 and will make the Bank of England more confident that its optimistic stance on wage growth is bearing fruit. Remember that survey evidence from Bank of England Agents has been pointing to the best year for pay settlements since the financial crisis.

Admittedly, we may be nearing a short-term peak. The first few months of last year were very bad for pay, but as this bleak period starts to exit the annual comparison, the numbers will start to encounter some more challenging base effects from next month.

2.9%

Wage growth

(excl. bonuses, YoY%)

As expected

That aside, there's nothing here to make the Bank doubt its outlook for wage growth. Given that policymakers have cited rising pay pressure as a key justification for tighter monetary policy, we think markets are underestimating the risks of a summer rate rise.

Still, what really matters between now and August is what is happening in the consumer arena. By some measures, the first quarter of 2018 was one of the worst for UK retail, with slowing consumer demand, higher minimum wage costs and elevated business rates creating a kind of perfect storm for the high street. Whilst the jobs numbers have recovered since the start of the year (almost 200k increase in this latest report), and real incomes are no longer falling, retailers are not out of the woods just yet.

This is probably the biggest risk to the monetary policy outlook. But for now, assuming the activity data recovers, bolstering the Bank's assumption that much of the first quarter dip was snow-related, we still suspect that policymakers will be keen to raise rates in August.

Author

James Smith

Developed Markets Economist

james.smith@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit <http://www.ing.com>.