Retail sales accelerated by 6.0% in November 2018 compared to November 2017. Non-food items pulled the November figure higher, accelerating by 7.7%, likely due to the increasingly popular Black Friday. Lower oil prices still supported fuel sales, which increased 5.7%, while food items grew in the low single digits, at 4.7%.

The news coming from consumer spending could remain positive for December 2018 as well, but the future looks challenging. Consumer sentiment declined in the first two months of the fourth quarter while real wage growth remained mostly in the single digit area throughout 2018.

Moreover, the newly enacted fiscal changes are yet to be reflected in consumer sentiment.
