

Singapore: Retail sales surprise on the upside

Retail sales managed to grow much quicker than expected

8.7% March retail sales growth (YoY)

Higher than expected

March retail sales rise 8.7%

Singapore's retail sales grew much stronger than anticipated, posting an 8.7% increase. The market consensus pegged retail sales growth at just 0.7% with faster inflation expected to dent some demand, but sales remained brisk. Retail sales ex-auto grew 13.4%, helped by a strong showing for online sales, which grew 14.9% year-on-year.

Surprise pickup in retail sales driven in part by online purchases

Positive surprise but concerns linger

Today's upside surprise suggests that 1Q GDP could be revised higher as sales remained robust despite a pickup in inflation. However, with inflation expected to accelerate in the near term (core inflation could hit 3.5%) we believe that retail sales growth may eventually lose some momentum. Furthermore, a projected slowdown in global trade could also weigh on consumer sentiment, yet another factor that could dampen retail sales in the near term.
