Headline CPI rose by 5% YoY for a second month in December

Both headline and core inflation were unchanged for a second month in December. Headline CPI remained at 5.0% YoY, slightly lower than the market consensus of 5.1%, with core CPI remaining at 4.8%. Electricity, Water and Gas (EWS) rose the most - by 23.17% - while fresh vegetable prices fell (by 2.5%) for the second month. Among services, rent slowed to 1.4% in December (vs 1.6% in November). Given Korea's two-year lease structure, the sharp declines observed have only gradually been reflected in CPI. We expect the trend to fall in the coming months.

CPI Outlook

The government and KEPCO announced today that electricity rates will rise by 11.4 won (9.5%) per kWh from 1 January, pushing up CPI by about 0.15 pt. On top of this, gasoline tax cut will be reduced from 37% to 25% also from 1 January, adding another 0.12 pt. Combined, the two will boost CPI by about 0.3 pt in January.

This will trigger the secondary effect of further price hikes over time, and other public service fees such as public transportation rates are also planned to rise. Thus, headline CPI is set to remain above 2% throughout the year. We still expect downward pressure to grow due to sharp declines in rents and weak demand-side pressures.

Base effects will likely lower headline CPI early next year, thus we look for a level of 4% for CPI in 1Q23.
