

Sweden's Riksbank stays cautious, for now

Sweden's central bank has defied hawkish expectations and is sticking to its past script of no rate hike before 2024 and no change to its balance sheet size in 2022. In practice, both policies are likely to be adjusted earlier than the Riksbank is currently signaling, but with a lot of tightening already in the price, the medium-term upside for SEK is limited

Source: Shutterstock

Set against the increasingly hawkish Federal Reserve, the European Central Bank and Bank of England, Thursday's Riksbank meeting erred more on the dovish side than we had expected.

While recent ECB rhetoric increasingly points to a deposit rate hike within the next 12 months, the Riksbank is still formally signaling no change in the repo rate until the latter part of 2024. The bank's closely-watched interest rate projection has only altered subtly in its latest update compared with November.

In practice, we think the first rate hike is likely to come much earlier than that, potentially in the first half of 2023. Wage negotiations, which occur on a three-year cycle, are due to conclude next spring and there's a growing chance that these will result in a higher outcome than the 2020 round. The jobs market is tight while inflation expectations among employer and employee organisations are gently increasing.

Admittedly, policymakers were never going to acknowledge such a marked shift in rate hike plans at this stage, but we had suspected they might hint for the first time at a rate rise next year.

The other slight surprise is that the Riksbank has opted against shrinking the size of its balance sheet this year. It has become increasingly clear from recent meetings that the Swedish central bank will start this quantitative tightening process well ahead of the first rate hike. That of course would set it apart from its peers which are more likely to initiate the process after the rate hike cycle has started.

But despite some expectations to the contrary, for now, policymakers are sticking to their previous plan to keep the size of the balance sheet largely unchanged this year. However, we suspect that this guidance may well change before long. The statement reveals that three committee members preferred to reduce the volume of planned reinvestments from next quarter, to allow a passive reduction in the balance sheet size.

In short, we expect a gradual quantitative tightening process to begin at some point this year, followed by a rate hike in the first few months of 2023.

Riksbank continues to signal the first rate hike in 2024

Krona can recover in the short run, but upside capped in the medium run

The Riksbank sent a pretty clear signal to markets today: a change in its monetary stance is not imminent and won't happen unless there is strong evidence that inflation is set to remain higher for longer. Considering the global central bank backdrop, it is a firmly dovish message, and if it weren't for the krona already being undervalued and likely oversold, the spike in EUR/SEK would have probably been more pronounced.

On the back of this short-term undervaluation (around 2% vs the EUR before the RB meeting, in our calculations), we still think EUR/SEK is mostly facing downside risks in the coming weeks, and we expect a move to the 10.30-10.35 area by the end of this quarter should global risk sentiment stabilise. In the longer run, the Riksbank's dovishness should continue to put a cap on SEK's appreciation, especially considering there is still a good deal of tightening (65bp in the next 12 months) to be priced out of the SEK curve. We now expect EUR/SEK to stay above 10.00 for the remainder of the year.

Author

James Smith

Developed Markets Economist, UK

james.smith@ing.com

Francesco Pesole

FX Strategist

francesco.pesole@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit www.ing.com.