

The eurozone's shallow recession is nearing an end

The European Commission's economic sentiment indicator significantly improved in December, although it remained at a subpar level. Less positive was the increase in price expectations across the board, suggesting that the European Central Bank is unlikely to be pushed into early easing

Manufacturing remains the weakest link

The European Commission's economic sentiment indicator improved to 96.4 in December from 94.0 in November. While the indicator's level is still on the weak side, it is the third consecutive increase.

Industrial confidence (+0.3) slightly improved. While inventories now seem to be coming down, the order book assessment further deteriorated, meaning that the manufacturing sector might still see a few months of subdued activity. No wonder employment expectations softened again.

Confidence improved in both the retail sector (+1.4) and construction (+0.8). At the same time, there was a major increase in services sector sentiment (+2.9). Except for industry, economic sentiment is now back above its long-term average in all major sectors.

Consumer confidence also increased in December, with both a better assessment of the current situation and expectations for the next 12 months. The decline in energy prices and rising wages are certainly contributing to this. In a separate report, it appeared that retail sales fell 0.3% month-on-month in November, in line with expectations. This doesn't necessarily indicate negative consumption growth in the fourth quarter, since households likely spent more on services.

Even though the average level of the sentiment indicator in the fourth quarter was slightly above the third quarter, we still pencil in a small negative growth figure in the last quarter of 2023. But in the first half of 2024, a gradual recovery is likely to unfold, as the inventory correction comes to an end and real disposable incomes increase on the back of lower inflation.

Price expectations increase across the board

The information on inflation was less positive. In all sectors, selling price expectations increased and, apart from industry, remain significantly above their long-term average. Consumer inflation expectations also increased, after having declined in the three months before.

This is the first batch of important data in the run-up to the January ECB meeting. The bad news is that a lasting disinflation trend cannot be taken for granted yet. At the same time, the improving economic situation does not require an early interest rate cut. Data still seems geared towards a wait-and-see position at least until the second quarter.

Author

Peter Vanden Houte

Chief Economist, Belgium, Luxembourg, Eurozone

peter.vandenhoute@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit www.ing.com.