

UK growth beats estimates on strong service sector

The latest UK growth figure suggests the economy ended 2017 on a high note, but the surprising acceleration in services doesn't tally with the consumer slowdown

Source: Bank of England

0.5%

UK fourth quarter growth

(QoQ%)

Better than expected

Unexpected service strength

At 0.5%, UK fourth-quarter growth suggests that the economy performed a little better than feared at the end of 2017. We get relatively few details at this stage. But as the monthly flow of data has been suggesting, the manufacturing sector continued to flourish as global growth accelerated - although the overall production figures were held back to some degree by the North Sea pipeline outage back in December.

What is more surprising is the unexpectedly strong contribution from services, which grew at the fastest rate since the end of 2016 (0.6% QoQ growth). This doesn't really tally with what we've seen in the consumer sector, with evidence that households continued to hold back on non-essential purchases in the fourth quarter (particularly around Christmas). Of course, the service sector encompasses much more than just the consumer sector, but it is nevertheless a key driver. It's also worth saying that only 45% of this GDP estimate is based on actual data, with the remainder calculated by a model, leaving some scope for a possible downward revision later on.

But whatever the case, given that the GDP data is already fairly outdated at the point of release, the key question now is, "what next"? Well, in the short-term at least, we see few catalysts for a further acceleration in UK growth. The outlook for consumer spending looks relatively bleak, even though the rate of inflation is starting to ease. Consumer confidence is the lowest since 2013, which is pretty stark when compared to the Eurozone and US, both of which are seeing sentiment at the highest levels since the early-2000s. And whilst an agreement is likely to be reached on a post-Brexit transition period this quarter, there is still plenty of Brexit-related uncertainty for firms to contend with.

What it means for interest rates

Admittedly, today's fourth quarter growth reading is better than the Bank of England had predicted at the time of the November inflation report. But if the UK economy does indeed struggle to move up a gear over coming months, the Bank will likely have to tread carefully when deciding whether to raise rates again this year. We don't expect any change in policy from the BoE in February, but a rate hike at the May meeting is an increasingly close call.

Author

James Smith

Developed Markets Economist, UK

james.smith@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit www.ing.com.