

UK housing market dampens like British weather

The weather isn't the only miserable thing at the moment in the UK, the property market seems to be in a similar state too

It isn't just the British weather that is damp and miserable at the moment. The property market is also looking in an increasingly sorry state, which will act as another reason not to hike interest rates.

The housing market, like most of the UK economy, held up well in the immediate aftermath of the Brexit referendum result last year, but things seem to be getting pretty bad now – particularly in London and the South East.

RICS takes note

According to the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors, the balance between the proportion of surveyors seeing house price rises to those seeing house price falls has dropped to just 1% - the weakest reading since February 2013. In London the story was far worse with the balance dropping to -48% while for the south east it stands at -24%.

Given these property markets saw the biggest price rises after the financial crisis are now seeing the largest falls perhaps isn't a surprise, but the scale of it and the fact that 68% of homes priced at more than £1 million are selling below the asking price perhaps is.

UK housing market is cooling

Brexit uncertainty at play

The pessimism is certainly spreading across the country with price expectations amongst estate agents falling to its lowest level since the immediate aftermath of the referendum outcome. The uncertainty over Brexit, the strain on household finances, the warning over excess credit growth and the general hit to confidence are all combining to present a weaker outlook for the property market.

Also, we have to remember there have been major changes to stamp duty. This is at both the top end of the market where properties over £937,500 have seen a sharp increase in the tax to be paid and more towards the bottom where buy-to-let investors are faced with an extra 3% of the property price charge.

However, with strong employment levels substantial falls in property prices look unlikely as people aren't forced to sell, instead, we expect a general drift lower.

But a weaker housing market still has broader implications: lower stamp duty receipts for the government, weaker retail sales particularly for home furnishings and we have to remember how important the housing market is for confidence, given high home ownership rates in the UK.

As such, it is yet another reason for the Bank of England to keep rates on hold.

Author

James Knightley

Chief International Economist

james.knightley@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. (“ING”) solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user’s investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit <http://www.ing.com>.