

UK inflation unexpectedly picks up amid stubborn services price rises

After an unexpected pick-up in UK inflation, the market may be getting ahead of itself by pricing a May rate cut. Services inflation is likely to remain stubborn in the near term, while much depends on the size of any fiscal stimulus at the March budget

UK inflation came in higher than expected in December, and this seems to be largely down to unexpected stubbornness in services inflation. Headline CPI unexpectedly rose to 4% (expected at 3.8%) while services inflation nudged up to 6.4% from 6.3% a month earlier, defying expectations for a further fall.

It is worth putting this in context by saying that even with this latest surprise, services inflation is still some 0.5 percentage points below the Bank of England's most recent projections. Some of this latest boost can also be chalked down to some stickiness in things like airfares and accommodation/package holidays, which the Bank itself said in the December meeting minutes were "not reliable" indicators of inflation persistence. And there were some pockets of good news.

Rent inflation, on a month-on-month basis (admittedly not seasonally-adjusted) was a little softer than we'd expected, while restaurants/bars continued to experience less aggressive month-on-month price rises than a year earlier. This latter category, we think, is one of the better gauges of underlying inflationary pressure in the service sector.

The lesson here is not to react to one month's worth of data on services inflation, which has bounced around a bit over recent months. But it is a reminder that the decline in services CPI will be gradual in the near term, and we don't expect this to dip below 6% until at least March.

Contributions to UK inflation and ING forecasts (YoY%)

Source: Macrobond, ING calculations

Still, the wider inflation story is looking brighter. Despite this latest setback, we continue to expect headline CPI to dip slightly below 2% in April and down to the 1.5% area in May/June. We expect this downtrend to be relatively broad-based, with further improvements highly likely in food and energy. On a seasonally-adjusted and three-month annualised basis, food inflation is running at roughly 2%. Meanwhile, natural gas prices point to, at the very least, a 15% fall in household energy bills in April.

What does this all mean for the Bank of England? Financial markets are pricing a rate cut in May, which we're still concerned might be a little premature. We don't rule it out, but we think it requires a) more tangible progress on both services inflation and wage growth in 1Q than we currently expect, and b) a relatively muted fiscal package from the Chancellor at the March budget. For now, we're pencilling in an August cut with 100bp of easing to follow this year, though we'll keep that under review as the data and fiscal news comes in over the next couple of months.

Author

James Smith

Developed Markets Economist

james.smith@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit <http://www.ing.com>.