

UK jobs report a mixed bag for the Bank of England

Further momentum in UK wage growth will be welcomed by the Bank of England. But as Brexit noise keeps rising, the hiring numbers are starting to look a little more concerning

Source: Shutterstock

For the Bank of England, the fact that UK wage growth is now the highest since the end of 2008 –3.2% excluding bonuses – will be the key takeaway from today's jobs report.

Momentum has really picked up over recent months, and reinforces the idea that firms are having to pay increasingly high premiums to retain and attract talent. As we noted in our preview, skill shortages are now most acute in the hospitality, construction & IT sectors. Given that the UK is a predominantly service-based economy – and a large chunk of service-sector firms' cost base is wages – the Bank expects this to translate into higher consumer prices in the medium-term, as companies look to protect margins.

Admittedly, we suspect the current level of wage growth represents something of a peak but we expect the underlying trend to stay with us as we move into 2019. So in any other situation, we suspect the Bank of England would be looking to hike rates again fairly soon.

3.2% UK wage growth (ex bonuses)

Higher than expected

But as ever, Brexit is the number one consideration, and there is some tentative evidence on the employment side of the jobs report that this is starting to cause problems. Admittedly, having ground to a complete halt over the summer, we did see a marginal rebound in hiring in the latest numbers (23,000 in September). But the unemployed claimant count shows that a rise over the past few months appears to be gaining further traction and importantly, is starting to diverge away from the number of job vacancies (see chart below).

Given the mounting uncertainty surrounding Brexit – in particular, whether Parliament will ultimately approve any deal Theresa May agrees – there is a risk we won't know for sure that 'no deal' has been avoided until the New Year. At the very least, this means that firms are likely to take a more precautionary stance to hiring and investment as they increasingly look to instigate contingency plans. We therefore think the recent trend in employment is likely to persist in the short-term, and we are likely to see the economy as a whole lose steam over the winter.

For that reason, we don't expect a Bank of England rate hike until May 2019 at the earliest.

The claimant count is starting to diverge from the number of vacancies

Author

James Smith

Developed Markets Economist

james.smith@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit <http://www.ing.com>.