

UK PMIs suggest rate cut will be avoided this month

While the latest PMIs probably aren't quite as make-or-break for policymakers as markets have made them out to be, the post-election improvement adds to the body of evidence suggesting sentiment has picked up in the new year. We think the Bank of England will keep rates on hold next week

Source: Shutterstock

52.4 UK composite PMI
(up from 49.3)

Better than expected

Markets are still divided on whether the Bank of England will cut interest rates at its first meeting of the decade next week. But at 52.4, the latest UK composite flash PMI number is likely to sow further seeds of doubt among those investors looking for policy easing next week.

Admittedly, the PMI probably isn't quite as consequential for the Bank of England as markets have suggested this week. Survey-based indicators aren't always the best predictors at political turning points, and policymakers are likely to put increased emphasis on the messages they are receiving from their agents network.

The latest PMI numbers for the UK are likely to sow further seeds of doubt among those investors looking for policy easing

Still, these latest PMI figures - which point to the sharpest rise in new orders since September 2018 - do nevertheless add to a body of evidence from sentiment data that optimism has increased since December's election result.

As we wrote in more detail on Thursday, we suspect the majority of the MPC will be comfortable with their cautious 'wait-and-see' stance adopted in November/December - and will opt against cutting interest rates next week.

The real question though is, can this renewed optimism translate into an upshift in UK activity over the next few months? We're not so sure. Since the election, it has become clear that the UK government's preference is not to extend the post-Brexit transition period. That sets up the tough, albeit not impossible, task of negotiating a basic free-trade agreement this year.

For both goods and service-sector businesses, this is likely to create material changes in the way they trade with the EU from next year. While there is plenty of uncertainty over how firms will react to these changes in advance, we think it is unlikely to lead to a revival in longer-term investment spending in the near-term.

Author

James Smith

Developed Markets Economist

james.smith@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. ("ING") solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit <http://www.ing.com>.