

UK retail activity rebounds after weather-distorted March

The year-long retail recession we saw in 2022 looks increasingly like it's over, and with real wage growth set to become less negative, the worst is probably behind us for the sector

After a rainy March, UK retail sales rose by 0.5% in April

After a rain-battered March, UK retail sales rose by 0.5% in April, partially offsetting the weakness seen in the prior month. And more importantly, the year-long retail recession we saw in 2022 looks increasingly like it's over. Sales are up fractionally since December's trough, and the worst is probably behind us for retailers. Real wage growth – measured crudely as regular pay growth adjusted for headline inflation – is set to become much less negative over the coming months as energy prices fall but nominal pay growth proves sticky. Consumer confidence has also begun to recover.

None of this points to an imminent recovery in the level of retail activity. The well-publicised fall in gas prices, together with consistent and very visible falls in petrol prices on forecourts probably explains a lot of the recovery in confidence. But food prices continue to rise unabated, and these will act as a key constraint on household budgets – particularly those on lower incomes – over the next few months.

The worst is probably behind us for retail sales

Source: Macrobond, ING calculations

In the very near term, we may get some extra volatility in retail sales surrounding the King’s Coronation earlier this month – though experience from the extra bank holidays in 2022 suggests that extra food sales could help counterbalance weakness from temporary shop closures. Overall, we expect monthly GDP to contract by half a percent in May (to be fully recovered in June).

None of this is of much consequence for the Bank of England, which now looks poised to hike rates once again in June after those unhelpful inflation figures this week. While some unusual (and probably temporary) moves in certain components drove some of the upward surprise in core CPI, it nevertheless puts policymakers in an awkward situation.

We doubt the committee would endorse the recent move in market pricing, which has more than 100bp of additional tightening priced in. The level of rate expectations for later this year (circa 5.5%) and the spread on future rate expectations between the UK and the US is now not dissimilar to what we saw around the time of the BoE’s November 2022 meeting, when it cautioned that market pricing looked overstretched.

But given the tendency for the inflation numbers to outperform expectations recently, we doubt the Bank will attempt to push back too hard against these expectations right now. We still get another round of data before the June meeting so we’ll reserve full judgement until then. But for now, we expect another hike in June without much pre-commitment on future steps.

Author

James Smith

Developed Markets Economist, UK

james.smith@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. (“ING”) solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user’s investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit www.ing.com.