

US households are noticing the cooling jobs market

The latest Conference Board consumer confidence report suggests households are noticing the jobs market is cooling quickly. Historically this has been a major warning signal that unemployment is going to rise. This report suggests a breach of 5% is possible before year-end, which would undoubtedly raise the odds of a second 50bp Fed rate cut

The Conference Board measure of consumer confidence looks disappointingly soft with the headline index dropping to 98.7 in September from 105.6 in August (initially reported as 103.3). The consensus forecast was 104.0 with the outcome being lower than anyone was predicting in the Bloomberg survey – the lowest individual submission was 101.0 from 46 different groups. Expectations dropped from 86.3 to 81.7 while the current conditions index dropped 10.3 points to 124.3. This is quite an alarming decline and is the weakest outcome since March 2021 for current conditions.

The labour differential – jobs plentiful less jobs hard to get looks especially worrying (see chart below). This suggests people are now noticing a clear cooling in the jobs market and this measure has a tendency to lead changes in the unemployment rate. We are currently at levels historically consistent with the unemployment rate rising above 5% in the next few months. If that happens the market is right to expect another 50bp cut at either the November or December FOMC meetings – remember last week the Federal Reserve said it was only expecting the unemployment rate to rise to 4.4% by year-end.

This data is also consistent with the fall in the quit rate – the proportion of workers quitting their jobs to move to a new employers. That has been indicating that either the jobs on offer were not particularly attractive or that workers were starting to value tenure in case they were to be laid off. This really puts the onus on next week's US jobs report. Anything around the 50,000 mark on non-farm payrolls or if the unemployment rate resumes its upward grind would lift talk of the Fed needing to loosen monetary policy more swiftly.

Consumers are feeling a cooler jobs market, which points to further rises in the unemployment rate

Source: Macrobond, ING

Author

James Knightley

Chief International Economist, US

james.knightley@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. (“ING”) solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit <http://www.ing.com>.