

Worrying UK data casts further doubt over rate hikes

Today's disappointing consumer credit and manufacturing data takes a May rate hike even further off the table

Source: iStockphoto

At 53.9, the UK manufacturing PMI is now the lowest it has been since late 2016 - and unlike a large chunk of recent UK data, we can't blame the weather can't really be blamed this time. With new orders reportedly growing more slowly, it's possible that the combination of a moderation in Eurozone activity and a slightly stronger pound are beginning to drag. At the margin, protectionist sentiment may have also played a role too.

As always, it's worth remembering manufacturing only makes up around 10% of the UK economy, so it will be Thursday's services PMI that will have a much greater bearing on Bank of England policy. While some rebound from the snow is likely, we suspect it would have to increase a lot to rekindle any talk of a rate hike next week. It's clear the high street has had a particularly rough start to 2018 - perhaps the worst quarter since the financial crisis as rising minimum wage costs, higher business rates and slower demand continues to bite.

On the latter, the massive decrease in consumer credit growth looks concerning. According to data released this morning, net consumer credit increased by just £0.3 billion in March, significantly below the usual growth of between £1.4-1.8bn. While there's every chance this is a blip, it does tally with the recent credit conditions survey from the BoE, which suggested credit availability has tightened significantly so far this year. With real incomes barely rising, such a sharp fall in consumer credit does not bode well for either the high street or the overall growth outlook.

£254m

Rise in consumer credit in March

(Lowest since Nov 2012)

Worse than expected

All of this means that a May rate hike from the Bank of England is now even further off the table.

However, as we noted on Friday, we think the market reaction to the weak GDP print was a little extreme. After all, the Bank has been very clear it wants to hike rates soon to combat the potential threat of higher wage growth. An August rate hike therefore still looks fairly likely, but with Brexit talks likely to heat up in autumn, core inflation falling and growth continuing to struggle, what happens after that is much less assured.

Weak UK growth makes a May rate hike a very tough sell

Author

James Smith

Developed Markets Economist

james.smith@ing.com

Disclaimer

This publication has been prepared by the Economic and Financial Analysis Division of ING Bank N.V. (“ING”) solely for information purposes without regard to any particular user's investment objectives, financial situation, or means. ING forms part of ING Group (being for this purpose ING Group N.V. and its subsidiary and affiliated companies). The information in the publication is not an investment recommendation and it is not investment, legal or tax advice or an offer or solicitation to purchase or sell any financial instrument. Reasonable care has been taken to ensure that this publication is not untrue or misleading when published, but ING does not represent that it is accurate or complete. ING does not accept any liability for any direct, indirect or consequential loss arising from any use of this publication. Unless otherwise stated, any views, forecasts, or estimates are solely those of the author(s), as of the date of the publication and are subject to change without notice.

The distribution of this publication may be restricted by law or regulation in different jurisdictions and persons into whose possession this publication comes should inform themselves about, and observe, such restrictions.

Copyright and database rights protection exists in this report and it may not be reproduced, distributed or published by any person for any purpose without the prior express consent of ING. All rights are reserved. ING Bank N.V. is authorised by the Dutch Central Bank and supervised by the European Central Bank (ECB), the Dutch Central Bank (DNB) and the Dutch Authority for the Financial Markets (AFM). ING Bank N.V. is incorporated in the Netherlands (Trade Register no. 33031431 Amsterdam). In the United Kingdom this information is approved and/or communicated by ING Bank N.V., London Branch. ING Bank N.V., London Branch is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and is subject to regulation by the Financial Conduct Authority and limited regulation by the Prudential Regulation Authority. ING Bank N.V., London branch is registered in England (Registration number BR000341) at 8-10 Moorgate, London EC2 6DA. For US Investors: Any person wishing to discuss this report or effect transactions in any security discussed herein should contact ING Financial Markets LLC, which is a member of the NYSE, FINRA and SIPC and part of ING, and which has accepted responsibility for the distribution of this report in the United States under applicable requirements.

Additional information is available on request. For more information about ING Group, please visit <http://www.ing.com>.