Listen: Are we there yet?

In this podcast, ING's James Knightley, Carsten Brzeski and James Smith discuss whether interest rates in the US and Europe are close to a peak, what this could mean for the global economy, and whether rate cuts could be in the offing this year

After one of the most aggressive tightening cycles in decades, the Federal Reserve and Bank of England signalled this week that their work is mostly complete. In contrast, the European Central Bank is still playing catch-up, warning that significant rate hikes lie ahead. In this podcast, ING's Rebecca Byrne asks economists James Knightley, Carsten Brzeski and James Smith what impact these decisions will have on the global economy in the year ahead.
